RESEARCH EXPERIENCE

2018 - 2020 Information Behavior of Parents of Children with ASD (autism spectrum disorder)

This project aims to understand the ASD-related information behavior of parents with autistic children through recognition of children's abnormal behavior, diagnosis, and treatment.

I conducted the following things:

- One-month observation on parents' information behavior at ASD therapy classes at Paintings of the Innocents, Beijing.
- First-round interviews with 16 parents from classes to understand the effect of information grounds in their information-seeking.
- Second-round interviews with 14 parents from classes (9 parents participated in the first-round interview) to understand parents' information behavior in different periods.
- Content analysis (with NVivo) to understand parents' information needs, types of behaviors, information sources, and influencing factors.

2016 - 2017 Factors Influencing Emoji Usage in Smartphone Mediated Communications

Funded by Peking University Principal Fund Project, this project aims to explore the factors that influence users' usage and interpretation of different emojis in communications.

I led a group to conduct the following things:

- Sentiment coding of emoji in 6,821 messages from 31 participants. We tested the coding consistency with Kappa.
- Descriptive statistics and non-parametric tests (with SPSS) to compare the emoji usage of different users.

2015 - 2016 The Primary School Students' Internet Usage for Learning

Funded by Peking University Challenge Cup Academic Competition, this project aims to understand how primary school students use the Internet to facilitate their studies.

I led a group to conduct the following things:

- One-week diary study with 28 primary school students. Participants were asked to record their online activities when learning.
- Focus group with three participants to understand the reasons why they use or not use the Internet during learning.
- Content analysis and descriptive statistics to know participants' frequency of online activities when learning, the information resources they use, and their attitude towards the Internet in learning.
